QUIET MONEY WITH VIVIAN

THE MONEY LEAK FINDER

Where Did Your Money Go?

Find the thousands of dollars quietly disappearing from your life every year - in about 15 minutes.

Not by stripping away the things that make life enjoyable. This workbook is designed to help you find the money you spend without meaning to - the subscriptions you forgot, convenience you stopped valuing, upgrades that became invisible, and purchases you would not make again today.

A practical money reset for people who earn reasonably well, enjoy their lives, and still occasionally look at their accounts and think: Where did all of that go?

Virtual character | Financial education, not financial advice

You are not here to become cheaper.

Most money advice starts by asking what you can give up. That is not what we are doing.

If the morning coffee makes your day better, keep it. If you love restaurants, travel, a nice apartment, your hobbies, or paying for convenience because it gives you time back, those expenses are not automatically problems. Money is supposed to improve your life.

The problem is the spending that does not improve your life - especially when it repeats quietly.

A $14.99 subscription is easy to ignore. So is a $9 delivery fee, a premium tier you stopped noticing, or a $40 purchase you barely remember. Individually, none feels dramatic. Repeated across months and categories, they can become real money.

The standard we will use

Would I consciously choose this expense again today?

If yes, it may deserve your money. If no, we have found something worth examining.

This is not an exercise in guilt. It is an exercise in attention. Your only job is to notice, calculate, and choose.

What you need - and what you do not

Open the last 60-90 days of transactions from the accounts you use most: checking, credit cards, payment apps, or whichever accounts capture your everyday spending.

You do not need to build a perfect budget. You do not need to label every grocery run. You do not need to remember every purchase.

Instead, scan for the six leak zones in this workbook. When you find something, estimate its monthly cost. If it is irregular, use a reasonable monthly average.

Before you look

Write your instinctive estimate. How much money do you think you spend each month on things you would happily erase if the money appeared back in your account today?

QUESTION	YOUR ANSWER
My guess	$ _____
A number that would genuinely surprise me	$ _____
The thing I would rather use that money for	_____

Keep this in mind

The interesting number is not how much you spend. It is how much you spend without getting enough value in return.

Leak 1 - Money still being charged after the value disappeared

Recurring charges are dangerous for one simple reason: the decision happens once, but the payment keeps happening.

Look for subscriptions and memberships you forgot, duplicated services, premium plans whose extra features you do not use, old trials, storage plans, apps, media, fitness memberships, and anything else that renews automatically.

EXPENSE	MONTHLY	KEEP / CUT / CHANGE
Streaming / media	$ ____	____
Apps / software / storage	$ ____	____
Memberships / fitness / clubs	$ ____	____
Premium plans or add-ons	$ ____	____
Trials that became paid	$ ____	____
Other recurring charges	$ ____	____

Monthly amount you would reclaim: $ _____

Annual amount: $ _____ x 12 = $ _____

Do not cancel something just because it is recurring

Ask: If this service vanished tonight, would I notice enough to sign up again tomorrow? If the answer is yes, keep it without guilt.

Leak 2 - Convenience that stopped feeling convenient

Convenience can be one of the best things money buys. Paying to save time can be rational. The leak begins when the convenience becomes automatic and the benefit becomes forgettable.

Scan for delivery fees, rush shipping, rides taken from habit, service charges, last-minute fees, convenience-store purchases, and paid shortcuts that you would not deliberately choose at their full monthly cost.

EXPENSE	MONTHLY	KEEP / CUT / CHANGE
Delivery / service fees	$ ____	____
Rush shipping	$ ____	____
Rides taken mostly from habit	$ ____	____
Last-minute / convenience fees	$ ____	____
Small convenience purchases	$ ____	____
Other	$ ____	____

Monthly amount you would reclaim: $ _____ Annual: $ _____

A useful distinction: “I can do this myself” does not mean you should. The question is whether the convenience is worth what you are paying for it.

Leak 3 - Purchases you would not buy twice

This category catches the small purchases that felt harmless in the moment and became almost meaningless afterward.

Look at online orders, checkout add-ons, items purchased to reach a free-shipping threshold, duplicates, one-use purchases, trend purchases, and inexpensive things that accumulated without becoming useful.

Do not count something simply because it was unnecessary. Count it only if, knowing what you know now, you would prefer to have the money back.

EXPENSE	MONTHLY AVG.	WOULD BUY AGAIN?
Online impulse purchases	$ ____	____
Checkout add-ons	$ ____	____
Free-shipping threshold purchases	$ ____	____
Duplicates / unnecessary replacements	$ ____	____
One-use / quickly forgotten items	$ ____	____
Other	$ ____	____

Monthly average you would rather keep: $ _____ Annual: $ _____

A simple test

Imagine the item in one hand and its purchase price in cash in the other. Which would you choose today?

Leak 4 - The upgrade that became invisible

One of the quietest ways spending grows is through standards. Something that once felt like an upgrade becomes normal, and soon you are paying more without receiving the same increase in satisfaction.

This can happen with service tiers, brands, booking upgrades, everyday products, delivery frequency, memberships, or any category where “the nicer version” became the default.

We are not trying to reverse every upgrade. Some upgrades are worth every dollar. We are looking for the ones you stopped caring about.

UPGRADE	MONTHLY EXTRA	KEEP / CHANGE
Premium service tiers	$ ____	____
More expensive everyday option	$ ____	____
Automatic booking upgrades	$ ____	____
Brand premium I no longer value	$ ____	____
Convenience upgrade now treated as baseline	$ ____	____
Other	$ ____	____

Monthly amount I would willingly downgrade: $ _____ Annual: $ _____

The reset question

If I were choosing from scratch today - with no existing habit - would I pay extra for this exact upgrade?

Leak 5 - Money lost to friction

Some spending gives you nothing at all. It exists because something was forgotten, delayed, duplicated, or left unfinished.

Look for late fees, cancellation fees, account fees, subscriptions you meant to cancel, unused credits, returns you never completed, duplicated services, or charges you have been meaning to investigate.

EXPENSE	MONTHLY AVG.	ACTION
Late / cancellation fees	$ ____	____
Account / service fees	$ ____	____
Unused credits / balances	$ ____	____
Returns never completed	$ ____	____
Duplicate services	$ ____	____
Other avoidable friction	$ ____	____

Monthly average: $ _____ Annual: $ _____

This category is useful because removing it rarely makes life feel smaller. You are not giving up an experience. You are simply closing a hole.

Leak 6 - The 72-hour regret list

Now look for a different kind of leak: purchases that felt better before you bought them than after.

Maybe the purchase was a reward after a difficult day. Maybe it was boredom. Maybe you wanted the feeling of upgrading, fitting in, celebrating, or becoming a slightly different version of yourself.

There is nothing wrong with emotional spending. Money is emotional. The useful question is whether the purchase actually delivered the emotion you were buying.

PURCHASE	COST	WOULD BUY AGAIN?
Purchase 1	$ ____	Yes / No
Purchase 2	$ ____	Yes / No
Purchase 3	$ ____	Yes / No
Purchase 4	$ ____	Yes / No
Purchase 5	$ ____	Yes / No

Average monthly amount I would not spend again: $ _____

Annualized: $ _____

Notice the motive, not just the item

Ask: Did I want the thing - or did I want the feeling I thought the thing would give me?

Now calculate your Money Leak Number

Add only the spending you genuinely want back. Do not inflate the number by counting everything optional. This number should represent money you would rather redirect without feeling that your life became worse.

LEAK ZONE	MONTHLY AMOUNT
Forgotten recurring money	$ _____
Low-value convenience	$ _____
Purchases I would not repeat	$ _____
Invisible upgrades	$ _____
Fees and friction	$ _____
72-hour regret spending	$ _____

TOTAL MONTHLY LEAK: $ _____

Multiply by 12.

$ _____ / YEAR

Now multiply the annual number by five. This is simple arithmetic - no investment return or growth assumed.

$ _____ / 5 YEARS

This is the point of the exercise

A $17 charge is forgettable. A collection of small decisions repeated for years is not. You are finally looking at the decisions together.

What would you rather buy?

Saving money for the sake of watching a number grow is not emotionally compelling for everyone. Give the reclaimed money a job that matters to you.

Imagine your annual Money Leak Number arriving in your account today as cash. What would you want it to become?

I WOULD RATHER BUY...	CHOOSE
A trip or experience I keep postponing	■
A stronger emergency cushion	■
Less debt	■
A home goal	■
More ability to take time off	■
More freedom to leave a bad job or situation	■
Something I genuinely want	■
My own goal: _____	■

My annual Money Leak Number is $ _____.

I would rather turn it into _____.

That matters to me because:

_____

_____

_____

_____

You did not need to earn this money again. You were already earning it. You simply were not deciding where all of it went.

Do not cut everything. Re-choose everything.

The fastest way to hate a money reset is to treat every expense like an enemy. Instead, use three decisions.

KEEP

It adds real value. I use it, enjoy it, or would deliberately buy it again. It stays.

CUT

I barely notice it, do not use it, or would rather have the money. It goes.

CHANGE

I value it, but not at this price, frequency, quantity, or tier. I keep the benefit and redesign the cost.

EXPENSE	MONTHLY IMPACT	KEEP / CUT / CHANGE
1. _____	$ ____	_____
2. _____	$ ____	_____
3. _____	$ ____	_____
4. _____	$ ____	_____
5. _____	$ ____	_____

Money I can redirect immediately each month: $ _____

Your 7-Day Money Leak Reset

You have already done the thinking. Now make the result real. One small action per day is enough.

DAY	ACTION
DAY 1	Cancel or downgrade the three easiest recurring leaks.
DAY 2	Review convenience spending. Keep the conveniences that truly buy you time or pleasure; change the automatic ones.
DAY 3	Resolve one forgotten return, fee, credit, duplicate charge, or cancellation.
DAY 4	Re-choose your premium tiers and invisible upgrades.
DAY 5	Create a cooling-off rule for the kind of purchases you most often regret.
DAY 6	Redirect the money you reclaimed toward the goal you selected.
DAY 7	Put a 20-minute monthly Money Leak Review on your calendar.

Your target

By the end of the week, the goal is not to have a perfect financial life. The goal is to have fewer accidental expenses and more money moving toward something you consciously chose.

Write the first action you will take today:

_____

_____

_____

_____

Three rules that make this last

1. See recurring spending annually.

A small monthly number is easy to dismiss. Before accepting a new recurring expense, multiply it by 12. Decide on the annual price, not the monthly marketing number.

2. Protect meaningful spending first.

If you need to redirect money, start with spending you barely value. Do not automatically attack the things that make your life rich in experience, relationships, health, time, or genuine enjoyment.

3. Make fewer decisions repeatedly.

Good intentions are exhausting when they must be recreated every day. Use simple personal rules for recurring charges, upgrades, impulse purchases, and money reviews.

Write one rule of your own

My money rule:

_____
_____

_____
_____

The goal is not to make your life cheaper. It is to make sure it is expensive for the right reasons.

You solved the first problem.

You now know how to identify money that leaves your life without giving you enough in return. You have a number, a destination for that money, and a seven-day plan.

That is a complete win. You can stop here, implement it, and be better off for having done the work.

But there is a larger problem the Money Leak Finder was never designed to solve:

How do you decide where all of your money goes before your lifestyle decides for you?

Because even after you clean up old leaks, new ones can appear. Income can rise. Standards can rise. A raise can quietly become a more expensive normal. A bonus can disappear into upgrades. And a good income can still fail to create the freedom you expected it to create.

THE QUIET WEALTH SYSTEM

A practical system for deciding what your money is for before you spend it: personal money rules, a Lifestyle Creep Firewall, a Raise Rule, automation, and a short monthly review.

You found where your money disappears. Now decide where it goes.

Or maybe your problem is not control. It is permission.

There is another uncomfortable money problem that can survive even when you earn well and manage your finances responsibly.

You want to enjoy what you worked for. But after a dinner, a trip, a beautiful purchase, or something purely for yourself, a second voice appears:

Was that irresponsible? Should I have saved it instead? Am I hurting my future?

The answer is not to stop spending. It is to become more confident about which spending is worth it to you.

SPEND WITHOUT REGRET

A decision system for understanding what is genuinely worth your money, spotting approval and emotional spending, setting your own big-purchase rules, and enjoying the purchases that pass your test.

Enjoy the money you worked for - without constantly wondering if you are stealing from your future.

Spend beautifully. Save deliberately. Stop paying for things you do not actually value.

Buy freedom, not applause.
